Raymond C. Scheppach, Executive Director
National Governors Association (NGA)
Hall of the States, 444 N. Capitol St., Ste. 267
Washington, DC 20001-1512

Dear Mr. Scheppach:

We hope this finds you well. You may recall hearing from us last year about the estimated 6 to 8 million dogs and cats who are relinquished to animal shelters across the U.S. annually, an urgent topic affecting every state budget and one that we hope you will consider discussing at the NGA's meeting later this month. We respectfully ask that the NGA use its influence to ensure strong action in 2011 to end animal homelessness.

No community is a stranger to the cost and consequences of animal overpopulation and homelessness. Please consider the following:

- Estimated annual taxpayer cost to take in, house, put to death, and dispose of unwanted dogs, cats, and other animals in the U.S.: $2 billion
- Estimated average cost of intake, care, and disposition per sheltered animal: roughly \$200
- Estimated percent of Americans—mostly children—bitten by dogs annually: two
- According to a report from the Centers for Disease Control and Prevention, unsterilized dogs are 2.6 times likelier to bite than dogs who have been sterilized.
- Recommendations such as "Spay or neuter your dog. Neutered dogs are less likely to bite" from the United States Postal Service and other partners of 2010 National Dog Bite Prevention Week (including the American Academy of Pediatrics, the American Society of Plastic Surgeons, the American Society of Maxillofacial Surgeons, the American Society for Reconstructive Microsurgery, and Prevent the Bite) are in sync with a recommendation in the American Veterinary Medical Association's Dog Bite Prevention Brochure, which advises: "Neuter your pet."

According to the December 1, 2010, "News and Numbers" from the Agency for Healthcare Research and Quality, the number of people admitted to the hospital because of dog bites increased by 86 percent—from 5,100 to 9,500 hospital stays—between 1993 and 2008. In 2008, treating patients admitted for dog bites cost hospitals an average of $18,200 per patient and $54 million overall! The NGA can help slow the increase in these costs and prevent pain and suffering for millions of Americans each year.

High intake and euthanasia rates, significant animal control costs, dangerous dogs threatening communities, roaming animals overturning trash, cats multiplying and damaging public and private property, and complaints of neglect and cruelty pinpoint the issue of large numbers of unwanted animals that the community and government has to deal with.

The good news is that there is a practical, fiscally sensible solution to this epidemic, and it lies in prevention—getting in front of the problem instead of trying to clean it up (which has proved to be ineffective for decades). Requiring that dogs and cats be sterilized unless their owners purchase an annual breeding permit—the cost of which funds low-cost spay/neuter services—will save animals' lives and taxpayer dollars. Purposely bred puppies usually sell for several hundred dollars each. A permit fee is a reasonable and small price to pay to breed animals when taxpayers fund the capture, housing, and disposition of others.

We respectfully urge the NGA to address animal homelessness and its inherent drain on the budget by including spay/neuter laws in the programs promoted by the NGA Center for Best Practices and implementing a Policy Position supporting legislative measures to address the animal overpopulation crisis. We can provide lawmakers with sample laws and language that works as well as link states with communities that have already instituted effective spay and neuter laws. We look forward to hearing from your office soon.

Sincerely,
