Mayflower the Turkey, a Thanksgiving Story

Mayflower the turkey was found as a baby at a Pennsylvania auction. He was about to be sent to slaughter for someone's Thanksgiving dinner, when his luck suddenly changed.

A PETA staffer and an animal-advocacy organization called Long Island Orchestrating for Nature rescued him and a dozen other sick baby turkeys and ducklings, saving them from a miserable death. Mayflower is now safe and happy in his permanent new home at Broome Animal Sanctuary in Middleburgh, New York.

Just like all turkeys, Mayflower has a unique personality. After being rescued, he befriended Lucy and Ethel, two chickens he now roosts with. He was smaller than them when he arrived, but today, healthy and thriving, he's four or five times their size. That doesn't bother them, though—they still do everything together, including cuddling up for naps, foraging in the grass, and enjoying fresh fruits and veggies.

Every year, more than 44 million turkeys are killed for Thanksgiving alone. Sensitive birds just like Mayflower are raised on factory farms and denied even the simplest of pleasures—like breathing fresh air, running, building nests, having families, and raising their young. They're forced to live in cramped, usually filthy conditions. Portions of their toes and upper beaks are cut off with a hot blade—all without painkillers—so they won't injure each other in the tightly packed warehouses they're forced to live in. At the slaughterhouse, their throats are cut, sometimes while they're still conscious. Turkeys feel pain and fear, just as humans and all other animals do. They don't need to be killed for our dinner.

Fortunately, Mayflower was saved before he could end up as a Thanksgiving meal, but millions of other turkeys like him aren't so lucky. His heartwarming story is intended to inspire people to choose delicious vegan meals for the holidays—and all year round. Just as a compassionate person saved Mayflower, we, too, can be compassionate and help save turkeys and other animals. Thanksgiving is all about appreciation, so this year, why not show your appreciation for turkeys and hundreds of other animals by deciding to leave them off your plate?
