Commander,

Having just scored my ninth Academy Award nomination with the justice-themed song "Stand Up for Something" from the 2017 film Marshall, I felt inspired to not only talk-the-talk but also walk-the-walk, by donating this song to my friends at PETA to use in their campaign to expose and end horrific trauma training drills you require for your military medical personnel.

In PETA eyewitness videos taken during similar military trauma training exercises, live pigs are shot and stabbed, and live goats have their limbs cut off with tree trimmers. Coast Guard Commandant Admiral Paul Zukunft was right when he told Congress last year this practice is "abhorrent" and he is ending it.

As my song says, we've all got to stand up for something:

Ain't here to judge, just to take a stand
The greater plan's the Creator's plan...
Let the ways of love be the ways of man

For the sake of our troops and animals, I urge you to end the use of animals in trauma training drills and switch completely to superior human simulation-based training as the Coast Guard and other military medical facilities have already done.

Thank you for your steadfast service to our nation.

Sincerely,

Diane Warren
