PRIMATE

Protection Pledge

Our company understands that removing infant primates from their mothers—as is common practice in the entertainment industry—is extremely traumatic, causes irreversible psychological harm, and leaves lifelong emotional scars. We also recognize that during training for films, television shows, commercials, and other productions, primates—including apes, monkeys, and prosimians—are often subjected to abuse, deprivation, and intimidation. Additionally, we’re aware that the living conditions for these primates are often abysmal and unacceptable and that when they’re no longer profitable to trainers, they may be discarded at seedy roadside zoos or other substandard facilities where they may be deprived of proper food and veterinary care.

In light of these undeniable facts, as an entertainment company, we pledge not to use primates in any of our productions.
